

THE LIBRARY / CSU PEDESTRIAN CONNECTION IS HERE!

Memorial Library has been called “the heart of the campus” and this heart will soon be physically connected to the body of Minnesota State University. The Library-Centennial Student Union (CSU) Pedestrian Connection, which has been under construction since mid-May, was completed in November.

Each day during the academic year as many as 5,000 people visit the Library and 9,500 visit CSU. The newly constructed underground pedestrian link will create a weatherproof, but naturally lit, route for students to access the resources and services housed in the Library, the CSU, and the rest of the campus. In particular, the connection will provide ADA-compliant access to the Office of Disability Services located in the lower level of Memorial Library. It will bring more foot traffic to the lower level of the CSU, which houses a variety of food service options, as well as the Maverick Bullpen. The connection also creates a small outdoor amphitheater on the west side of the passage that will be available for speakers, bands, and other performances.

For over 20 years this physical connection between the Library and CSU has been a desired campus renovation. Former CSU director Laurie Woodward commented, in an April 28, 2013 Free Press article, that students heavily supported the Library-to-CSU Underground Pedestrian Link and were particularly excited about being able to go back and forth between the student union and library when it gets cold.

Funding for the project came from the President Davenport’s Big Ideas Campaign, Library Services and the Centennial Student Union. Brennan Companies of Mankato is the primary construction contractor and Leo A. Daly of Minneapolis is the architect and design firm for the project.

If you find a great article while doing research, but are asked to pay to view the full-text, check Library resources first. Use the JOURNALS LIST search to confirm whether or not the Library subscribes to that journal. If the library does not subscribe, submit an interlibrary loan (ILL) request to receive a free copy of the article.
